Rhasheena GUSSOM, Appellant

v.

Maurice TEAGLE, Appellee

No. 12 EAP 2020

Argued: September 16, 2020

Decided: March 25, 2021

Synopsis

Background: Motorist filed complaint against defendant driver, seeking damages for personal injuries sustained in accident. She later filed praecipe for reinstatement of complaint. The Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County, Civil Division, April Term, No. 3821, Paula A. Patrick, J., 2019 WL 6703196, sustained driver's preliminary objections based on motorist's failure to timely serve driver with process, and denied motorist's motion reconsideration. Motorist appealed. The Superior Court, No. 3245 EDA 2018, Nichols, J., affirmed, 2019 WL 4739233. Motorist's petition for allowance of appeal was granted.

Holdings: The Supreme Court, No. 12 EAP 2020, Baer, J., held that:

[1] trial court has discretion to dismiss complaint based on plaintiff's failure to offer proof that she diligently attempted to timely serve process on defendant, regardless of whether plaintiff acted or failed to act intentionally, and

[2] motorist did not prove that she made good faith effort to serve driver with process within 30 days after filing complaint.

Affirmed.

Wecht, J., filed dissenting opinion in which Donohue and Mundy, JJ., joined.

Procedural Posture(s): On Appeal; Motion to Dismiss for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction.

West Headnotes (10)

[1] Limitation of Actions

The purpose of a statute of limitations is to protect defendants from stale claims.

[2] Process

The rule that a writ of summons shall remain effective to commence an action only if the plaintiff then refrains from a course of conduct of having the writ repeatedly issued without serving the defendant with process within 30 days of issuance of the writ, which operates to toll the applicable statute of limitations, applies equally to actions commenced by way of the filing of a complaint. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401\(b\)\(1\), 1007.

[3] Process

A plaintiff carries the evidentiary burden of proving that she made a good-faith effort to ensure that notice of commencement of an action was served on defendant within 30 days of issuance of a writ of summons or the filing of a complaint, in order to be entitled to reissuance of a writ summons or reinstatement of the complaint, and in each case, where noncompliance with the rules are alleged, the trial court must determine in its sound discretion whether a good-faith effort to effectuate notice was made. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401\(a\), 401\(b\)\(1\).

[4] Process

A trial court has the discretion to dismiss a complaint when a plaintiff fails to offer proof that she diligently attempted to serve process on a defendant within 30 days of the issuance of a writ of summons or the filing of a complaint and there is no evidence to indicate that the defendant had actual notice of the commencement of the action in the relevant time frame, regardless of whether the plaintiff acted or failed to act intentionally. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401\(a\), 401\(b\)\(1\).

[5] Motions 🔑

A motion for reconsideration is addressed to the sound discretion of the trial court.

[6] Appeal and Error 🔑

When an issue primarily presents a question of law, the scope of review is plenary, and the standard of review is de novo.

[7] Process 🔑

If a plaintiff fails to complete proper service of process, then the court lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401(a).

[8] Process 🔑

A plaintiff must act diligently to meet their good-faith requirement to effectuate service of process upon a defendant within 30 days of issuance of a writ of summons or the filing of a complaint so as not to dilute the policies underlying the statute of limitations. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401(a).

[9] Process 🔑

A plaintiff may fulfill the mandate requiring that she make a good-faith effort to serve a defendant with process within 30 days of the issuance of a writ of summons or the filing of a complaint, without strictly complying with the service rules, in order to be entitled to reissuance of the writ or reinstatement of the complaint, as long as her efforts resulted in actual notice of the lawsuit to the defendant. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401(a), 401(b)(1).

[10] Process 🔑

Motorist did not prove that she made good faith effort to serve defendant driver with process within 30 days after filing of complaint for personal injuries sustained in automobile accident, as required for motorist to be entitled to reinstatement of complaint; after she learned that her attempt to serve driver at address where driver no longer lived was unsuccessful, she did nothing else for several months, driver filed preliminary objections after applicable two-year limitations period governing suit would have run but for filing of complaint, seeking dismissal for failure to effect timely service of process, and motorist failed to file response or produce evidence to demonstrate that she made good faith effort to serve driver with process, but instead simply filed praecipe for reinstatement of complaint. Pa. R. Civ. P. 401(a), 1028(a)(1).

Appeal from the Judgment of Superior Court entered on 9/26/2019 at No. 3245 EDA 2018 affirming the Order entered on 10/3/2018 in the Court of Common Pleas, Philadelphia County, Civil Division, at No. 3821 April Term, 2018. Patrick, Paula A., Judge

OPINION

JUSTICE BAER

I. Introduction

*1 The Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure (“Rules”) allow a plaintiff to commence a civil action by filing either a praecipe for a writ of summons or a complaint. Pa.R.C.P. 1007. The Rules require a plaintiff to serve the defendant with original process within 30 days after the issuance of a writ or the filing of a complaint. Pa.R.C.P. 401(a). If the plaintiff does not effectuate service within that time period, she can praecipe for reissuance of the writ or reinstatement of the complaint. Pa.R.C.P. 401(b)(1). So long as the plaintiff files her writ or complaint before the expiration of the statute of limitations applicable to her cause of action, the original filing, as well as any subsequent reissuances or reinstatements, tolls the statute of limitations.

[1] [2] “In the seminal case of Lamp v. Heyman, 469 Pa. 465, 366 A.2d 882 (1976), this Court sought to end abuses of process by plaintiffs who tolled the statute of limitations by filing a writ of summons, had the writ repeatedly reissued, and deliberately failed to notify the defendant of the pending litigation.” McCreech v. City of Philadelphia, 585 Pa. 211, 888 A.2d 664, 665 (2005). “This process, while technically compliant with the Rules of Civil Procedure, nonetheless defeated the purpose of the statute of limitations, which is to protect defendants from stale claims.” Id. Thus, in Lamp, this Court held that “a writ of summons shall remain effective to commence an action only if the plaintiff then refrains from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery he has just set in motion.” Lamp, 366 A.2d at 889. This “Lamp rule” applies equally to actions commenced by way of the filing of a complaint.

[3] We refined the Lamp rule in Farinacci v. Beaver County Industrial Development Authority, 510 Pa. 589, 511 A.2d 757, 759 (1986), holding that “Lamp requires of plaintiffs a good-faith effort to effectuate notice of commencement of the action.” In addition, Farinacci clarified that: (1) the plaintiff carries an evidentiary burden of proving that she made a good-faith effort to ensure that notice of the commencement of an action was served on the defendant, McCreech, 888 A.2d at 672; and (2) “[i]n each case, where noncompliance with Lamp is alleged, the [trial] court must determine in its sound discretion whether a good-faith effort to effectuate notice was made[.]” Farinacci, 511 A.2d at 759.

This Court's most recent decision in the Lamp-line of cases is McCreech, supra. In McCreech, the Court expressed that when plaintiffs’ improper actions in serving original process put defendants on actual notice of the commencement of actions, trial courts should “dismiss only those claims where plaintiffs have demonstrated an intent to stall the judicial machinery or where plaintiffs’ failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure has prejudiced defendant.”

McCreech, 888 A.2d at 674.

[4] In the present matter, the Superior Court affirmed a trial court order that dismissed a plaintiff’s complaint based upon the plaintiff’s failure to serve timely her complaint upon the defendant despite the fact that the plaintiff’s actions did not amount to intentional conduct. This Court granted allowance of appeal to address whether the Superior Court’s decision conflicts with Lamp and its progeny. For the reasons that follow, we answer this question in the negative. More specifically, consistent with the Superior Court’s decision, we hold that a trial court has the discretion to dismiss a complaint when a plaintiff fails to offer proof that she diligently attempted to serve process on a defendant in a timely manner and there is no evidence to indicate that the defendant had actual notice of the commencement of the action in the relevant time frame, regardless of whether the plaintiff acted or failed to act intentionally. Because the Superior Court reached the correct result in this matter, we affirm that court’s judgment.

II. Background of the current appeal

*2 On July 25, 2016, Appellant Rhasheena Gussom (“Plaintiff”) and Appellee Maurice Teagle (“Defendant”) were involved in a motor vehicle accident. On April 26, 2018, Plaintiff filed a complaint against Defendant in the trial court. In her complaint, Plaintiff claimed that Defendant negligently caused the accident and that she suffered injuries as a result of the accident. Notably, Plaintiff filed her complaint within the two-year statute of limitations for negligence actions. See 42 Pa.C.S. § 5524\(2\) (setting a two-year statute of limitations for an “action to recover damages for injuries to the person or for the death of an individual caused by the wrongful act or neglect or unlawful violence or negligence of another”).

On May 9, 2018, Plaintiff filed an affidavit of non-service in the trial court. According to the affidavit, on May 4, 2018, Plaintiff attempted to serve the complaint on Defendant at an address in Philadelphia, but learned from the owners of the home that Defendant had sold the house a year-and-a-half earlier and moved to Virginia. On August 13, 2018, counsel entered an appearance for Defendant.<sup>1</sup> On August 22, 2018, i.e., nearly a month after the statute of limitations would have expired but for the filing of the complaint, Plaintiff filed a praecipe to reinstate her complaint.

On September 10, 2018, Defendant filed preliminary objections, claiming, inter alia, that the trial court should dismiss Plaintiff's complaint because she failed to serve it properly. Preliminary Objections, 9/10/2018, at ¶12 (citing Pa.R.C.P. 1028(a)(1) (permitting a defendant to file a preliminary objection on the ground that the plaintiff improperly served a complaint)). In support of his objection, Defendant observed that: (1) "Pennsylvania law demands that Plaintiffs in a civil action, upon filing of original process, refrain from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery they have just set into motion[.]" id. at ¶16 (citing, among other cases, McCreesh, supra); and (2) "[i]t is the plaintiff's burden to demonstrate that his efforts were reasonable[.]" id. at ¶19 (citing Bigansky v. Thomas Jefferson University Hosp., 442 Pa.Super. 69, 658 A.2d 423, 433 (1995)). Defendant acknowledged that Plaintiff attempted to serve the complaint on May 4, 2018, but he nonetheless averred that "Plaintiff utterly failed to make any semblance of good-faith efforts" to serve the complaint. Id. at ¶20. Plaintiff did not file a response to the preliminary objections or otherwise attempt to prove that she made a good-faith effort to serve the complaint in a timely manner; rather, on September 28, 2018, Plaintiff again filed a praecipe to reinstate her complaint.

[5] On October 3, 2018, the trial court entered an order sustaining Defendant's preliminary objection and dismissing Plaintiff's complaint with prejudice due to her failure to make good-faith efforts to serve the complaint on Defendant. Plaintiff subsequently filed a motion asking the trial court to reconsider its order. In that motion, Plaintiff stated that, on August 22, 2018, she sent the complaint via certified mail to an address in Virginia, but the mail went unclaimed. Plaintiff further asserted that, after this failed attempt at service, she believed that she had located Defendant in Philadelphia; she, therefore, reinstated the complaint on September 28, 2018. Plaintiff explained that her counsel "inadvertently failed to file a response" to Defendant's preliminary objections based upon counsel's misreading of the objections. Motion for Reconsideration, 10/5/2018, at ¶5. Plaintiff requested that the court reconsider its order dismissing her complaint because she, in fact, made good-faith efforts to serve the complaint.

The trial court denied Plaintiff's motion for reconsideration,<sup>2</sup> and Plaintiff appealed that order to the Superior Court.

*3 Plaintiff subsequently filed a concise statement of errors complained of on appeal, wherein she gave notice that she intended to argue to the Superior Court, inter alia, that the trial court erred by sustaining Defendant's preliminary objection on the basis that Plaintiff failed to make a good-faith effort to serve her complaint on Defendant. In response, the trial court authored an opinion in support of its order.

In its opinion, the trial court explained that, after a complaint is filed, the statute of limitations is tolled only if the plaintiff makes a good-faith effort to effectuate service. Trial Court Opinion, 1/3/2019, at 3 (quoting Englert v. Fazio Mechanical Services, Inc., 932 A.2d 122, 124 (Pa. Super. 2007)). The court further observed that the "Superior Court has held that unintentional conduct or 'simple neglect and mistake' to effect service is sufficient to demonstrate a plaintiff's lack of good faith." Id. (quoting Devine v. Hutt, 863 A.2d 1160, 1168 (Pa. Super. 2004)).

Applying these concepts to the matter sub judice, the trial court observed that Plaintiff filed her complaint on April 26, 2018, within the prescribed two-year statute of limitations, and then attempted to serve Defendant in Philadelphia, to no avail, in May of 2018. The court, however, stated that Plaintiff filed nothing else until the August 22, 2018, when she filed a praecipe to reinstate the complaint, which, the court noted, was two years and 28 days after the parties' motor vehicle accident. Id. at 4. The court also acknowledged that Plaintiff again reinstated her complaint on September 28, 2018, i.e., after Defendant filed his preliminary objections; yet, the court highlighted, Plaintiff provided "no evidence of good faith investigation to locate, or any practical effort to serve," Defendant. Id. at 5; see id. (explaining that Plaintiff "did not make any good-faith effort to locate or serve [Defendant] at any other address in Philadelphia or Virginia prior to the July 25, 2018, statute of limitations"). The court opined that Plaintiff's inaction in this regard evinced an intent to stall the judicial machinery.

In closing, the trial court recounted that Plaintiff failed to respond to Defendant's preliminary objections but nonetheless managed to file an additional praecipe to reinstate her complaint after Defendant filed his objections. The court suggested that the contradiction between Plaintiff's failure to respond to the objections and her willingness to file yet another praecipe to reinstate her complaint, as well as her refusal to “mount a good faith investigation; make practical efforts at service; or file a Motion for Alternative service prior to the July 25, 2018 statute of limitations is, at best, inaction, and at worst, prima facie evidence of bad faith.” Id. at 5. Because the court believed that Plaintiff wasted her ample opportunities to serve the complaint on Defendant, the court asserted that it properly sustained Defendant's preliminary objection and dismissed Plaintiff's complaint.<sup>3</sup>

On appeal, Plaintiff argued that the trial court erred in finding that she failed to prove that she made a good-faith effort to serve Defendant with the complaint. A majority of a three-judge panel of the Superior Court disagreed with Plaintiff and affirmed the trial court's order in an unpublished memorandum (“Memorandum”). In so doing, the court stated that a defendant may file a preliminary objection on the basis that the plaintiff failed to serve the complaint properly. Memorandum at 5 (citing Pa.R.C.P. 1028). The court explained that, when a defendant lodges such an objection, he must support it with evidence; after presenting evidence, the burden of proof shifts to the plaintiff. Id. (quoting Trexler v. McDonald's Corp., 118 A.3d 408, 412 (Pa. Super. 2015)).

*4 The Superior Court then summarized this Court's decisions in Lamp and McCreesh. In the course of providing this summary, the court noted that, in McCreesh, this Court held that trial courts should “dismiss only those claims where plaintiffs have demonstrated an intent to stall the judicial machinery or where plaintiffs’ failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure has prejudiced defendant.” Memorandum at 6 (quoting American Interior Const. & Blinds Inc. v. Benjamin's Desk, LLC, 206 A.3d 509, 513-14 (Pa. Super. 2019)). The court further noted that the burden is on the plaintiff to make a good-faith effort to effectuate service of a complaint. Id. In addition, the court observed that: (1) trial courts should assess what constitutes a good-faith effort on a case-by-case basis, id. at 7 (relying on Englert, 932 A.2d at 124-25); and (2) because Defendant filed verified preliminary objections on the basis that Plaintiff failed to serve properly her complaint, “the burden shifted to [Plaintiff] to establish that she made a good faith, reasonable effort to effectuate service[.]” id. at 8 (citing, inter alia, McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 672).

The Superior Court then recounted the circumstances of the present matter. The court acknowledged that Plaintiff filed an affidavit of non-service on May 9, 2018, wherein Plaintiff suggested that Defendant moved to Virginia. Yet, the court reported, the trial court's docket reflects no activity by Plaintiff between May 9th and August 22nd of 2018, when Plaintiff simply filed a praecipe to reinstate her complaint. The court asserted that Plaintiff did not: (1) identify any good-faith efforts that she made to locate and serve Defendant in that timeframe; (2) file a motion for alternative service; or (3) file a response to Defendant's preliminary objection challenging Defendant's allegation that Plaintiff failed to serve properly her complaint.

After summarizing the averments that Plaintiff made in her motion for reconsideration, the Superior Court stated, “In sum, as the trial court observed, [Plaintiff] did not allege, let alone provide, any evidence of a good faith investigation to locate, or any practical efforts to serve, [Defendant].” Memorandum at 9 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Again citing to this Court's decision in McCreesh, the Superior Court concluded that, given that Plaintiff carried the burden in the trial court to establish that she acted in good faith, the trial court did not abuse its discretion by sustaining Defendant's preliminary objection for lack of service. Id.

Senior Judge Strassburger authored a dissenting memorandum (“Dissenting Memorandum”). The dissent took the position that the factual circumstances underlying this matter do not support the trial court's decision to dismiss Plaintiff's complaint. Dissenting Memorandum at 4. Although the dissent recognized that Plaintiff waited four months from when she filed the complaint to file her first praecipe to reinstate the complaint, it opined that “there is no evidence that she did so with ‘an intent to stall the judicial machinery.’” Id. at 4-5 (quoting McCreesh, supra). The dissent also asserted that Defendant has not demonstrated that Plaintiff's conduct prejudiced him. Id. at 5.

The dissent further maintained that the Superior Court majority inappropriately punished Plaintiff for what amounts to simple neglect. In the dissent's view, a plaintiff's unintentional conduct that delays notice to the defendant does not meet the threshold for dismissal outlined in Lamp and McCreesh. The dissent ultimately concluded that Plaintiff “satisfied the statute of limitations by timely filing her complaint, and did not act with an intent to stall the judicial machinery or prejudice [Defendant].” Id. at 5-6. According to the dissenting judge, because Plaintiff attempted to serve Defendant with the complaint three times within two months of filing it, he would have reversed the trial court's order sustaining Defendant's preliminary objections and dismissing Plaintiff's complaint. Id. at 6.

III. Issue

*5 [6] Plaintiff filed a petition for allowance of appeal, which this Court granted to consider the following question: “Did the Superior Court err in holding that the Plaintiff did not make a good-faith effort to serve the Defendant, when the Superior Court's decision conflicts with holdings of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court on the same legal issue?”<sup>4</sup> Gussom v. Teagle, 228 A.3d 255, 256 (Pa. 2020) (table).

IV. Parties' arguments

Plaintiff asserts that Lamp holds that a plaintiff must make a good-faith effort to effectuate notice of the commencement of the action so as to avoid allowing the plaintiff exclusive control over it for a period in excess of the statute of limitations. Plaintiff contends, however, that after this Court decided Lamp, panels of the Superior and Commonwealth Courts took divergent approaches to Lamp's good-faith requirement.

More specifically, Plaintiff observes that some intermediate court decisions mandated strict compliance with the Rules of Civil Procedure to satisfy the good-faith requirement, while other opinions “took a more flexible approach, and excused plaintiff's defective service where the defendant has actual notice of the commencement of the action and is not otherwise prejudiced.” Plaintiff's Brief at 15. Plaintiff then explains that this Court granted allowance of appeal in McCreesh to rectify these discrepancies.

Plaintiff notes that, in McCreesh, this Court sided with the intermediate court decisions that required a good-faith inquiry to satisfy the plain language of Pa.R.C.P. 401, i.e., the Rule that governs the timing requirements regarding the service of original process.<sup>5</sup> In Plaintiff's view, McCreesh holds that courts should dismiss complaints when service of process was defective only if plaintiffs “have demonstrated an intent to stall the judicial machinery or where plaintiffs' failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure has prejudiced defendant.” McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 674. Plaintiff, however, suggests that “this Court has not directly addressed precisely what constitutes a good-faith effort, nor has the Court delineated what it means for a plaintiff to act with an intent to stall the judicial machinery.” Plaintiff's Brief at 16.

*6 According to Plaintiff, this gap in the law has led to the intermediate courts again rendering inconsistent decisions regarding the requisites of Rule 401, which, in turn, has resulted in case law that “insist[s] on a non-mechanical approach to what constitutes good-faith, but find[s] that neglect or mistake, or any other unintentional conduct on the part of the plaintiff constitutes a lack of good-faith.” Plaintiff's Brief at 17 (citing as examples Englert and Devine, supra); see id. (“The cases of Englert and Devine, serve to undermine the holdings of the McCreesh court, as they provide for the dismissal of claims for neglect, or mistake, and require neither a showing of intent to stall the judicial machinery, nor a showing that the defendant was prejudiced by the improper service.”). Plaintiff avers that these decisions cannot stand in light of Lamp and its progeny and that, in affirming the trial court's order in this matter, the Superior Court erroneously relied upon Englert and Devine. Indeed, Plaintiff suggests that mistake or other unintentional conduct cannot rise to the level of the inappropriate intentional behavior contemplated by McCreesh.

Next, Plaintiff asserts that, when the facts of this case are analyzed under Lamp and its progeny, it is obvious that she made a good-faith effort to serve her complaint on Defendant. Plaintiff's Brief at 19. Plaintiff contends that the standard set forth in McCreesh is clear: In cases, such as the present matter, “where there is technical noncompliance with the Rules of Civil Procedure, those technical missteps can be excused, unless there is a demonstrable ‘intent to stall the judicial machinery’ or actual prejudice to the defendant.” Id. at 20 (quoting McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 674).

Plaintiff submits that her actions in this case do not evince an intent to stall the judicial machinery and that those actions did not prejudice Defendant; thus, she acted in good faith in attempting to serve Defendant. Id. at 22. In support of this position, Plaintiff recounts the circumstances underlying this matter by relying, in part, on averments that she made in her motion for reconsideration: (1) she filed her complaint on April 26, 2018; (2) Plaintiff attempted service in early May of 2018 at Defendant's last known address in Philadelphia, but the new owners of the home stated that Defendant had moved to Virginia; (3) Plaintiff promptly filed an affidavit of non-service and attempted to locate Defendant in Virginia; (4) on August 22, 2018, Plaintiff believed that she discovered that Defendant lived in Waynesboro, Virginia, resulting in her filing a praecipe to reinstate the complaint; (5) the reinstated complaint was served via certified mail to the Virginia address, but the complaint went unclaimed; (6) after learning that service in Virginia had failed and believing that she had again located Defendant in Philadelphia, Plaintiff reinstated the complaint and served it on Defendant's father on September 29, 2018; and (7) the affidavit of service was docketed on October 10, 2018. Plaintiff's Brief at 22-25. Although Plaintiff concedes that there was a delay between her initial and last attempts to serve the complaint, she contends that she never intended to stall the judicial machinery, that Defendant was not prejudiced, and that she, therefore, acted in good faith.

In response, Defendant argues that it is well-settled law in Pennsylvania that Plaintiff carried the burden of proving that she made a good-faith effort to effectuate service of the complaint in a timely manner. Defendant insists that Plaintiff failed to meet this burden. In support of his argument, Defendant reminds the Court that Plaintiff's civil action was subject to a two-year statute of limitations and that the "purpose of any statute of limitations is to expedite litigation and thus discourage delay and the presentation of stale claims which may greatly prejudice the defense of such claims."

Defendant's Brief at 7 (quoting McCreech, 888 A.2d at 671). Defendant observes that the statute of limitations is not satisfied simply when a plaintiff timely files a complaint; rather, "the defendant must be provided notice of the action in order for the purpose of the statutes of limitation to be fulfilled." Id. (quoting McCreech, 888 A.2d at 671).

*7 [7] Although Defendant acknowledges that the filing of a complaint tolls the statute of limitations, he highlights that this rule of law benefits a plaintiff only if she makes a good-faith effort to serve the complaint. Indeed, Defendant notes, Pa.R.C.P. 401(a) dictates that original process must be served within 30 days after the issuance of a writ or the filing of a complaint. Id. at 8. Defendant points out that, if a plaintiff fails to complete proper service, then the court lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Id. (quoting Cintas Corp. v. Lee's Cleaning Services, Inc., 549 Pa. 84, 700 A.2d 915, 917-18 (1997)).

Next, Defendant turns his focus to Lamp and its progeny. According to Defendant, prior to Lamp, case law developed which allowed a plaintiff to commence an action by writ of summons and permitted the plaintiff to keep her cause of action alive by reissuing the writ within a time period equivalent to the statute of limitations applicable to the cause of action. Id. at 8-9. Defendant explains that, in Lamp, this Court stated that this practice was susceptible to abuse and that it was inconsistent with the policies underlying statutes of limitations; thus, the Court qualified the rule, holding that "a writ of summons shall remain effective to commence an action only if the plaintiff then refrains from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery he has just set in motion." Id. at 9 (quoting Lamp, 366 A.2d at 889). In other words, the Lamp Court required plaintiffs to attempt to deliver promptly the writ or complaint.

Defendant then recounts in detail a series of decisions that led to this Court's holding in McCreech. Id. at 9-19. Regarding McCreech itself, Defendant submits that, therein, the Court "announced a more flexible approach to the good-faith determination, 'excusing plaintiffs' initial procedurally defective service where the defendant has actual notice of the commencement of litigation and is not otherwise prejudiced.'" Id. at 19 (quoting McCreech, 888 A.2d at 666). Defendant suggests that, "[i]n sum, McCreech established a more flexible standard whereby a plaintiff's case will not be dismissed for technical missteps where the plaintiff provided the defendants with actual notice of the commencement of litigation, and the statute of limitations had not yet expired." Id. at 21-22.

Defendant further claims that Plaintiff misstates the standard set forth in McCreech. More specifically, Defendant submits that, contrary to Plaintiff's assertions, "McCreech does not simply state that technical missteps can be excused - bar none - unless there is an 'intent to stall the judicial machinery’ or actual prejudice to the defendant.” Id. at 22. Indeed, Defendant avers that the Superior Court’s decisions in cases like Englert appropriately apply McCreesh inasmuch as those decisions hold that the plaintiff’s negligence in fulfilling her service requirements evinced a failure to make a good-faith effort to effectuate service given that the plaintiff’s misguided effort did not result in the defendant receiving actual notice of the commencement of the action. Id. at 22-26. Building on this theme, Defendant contends that the Superior Court in the instant matter properly applied its case law, which complies with McCreesh, in affirming the trial court’s order.

In closing, Defendant insists that, because he filed a verified preliminary objection raising improper service, the Superior Court correctly concluded that the burden shifted to Plaintiff to demonstrate that she made a good-faith effort to serve Defendant in a timely manner. Id. at 27. As to the Superior Court’s review of the record, Defendant highlights that the court accurately explained that Plaintiff did not allege, let alone prove, that she made the requisite effort to serve Defendant with her complaint. Id. at 27-28. Indeed, identifying that a determination of whether a plaintiff acted in good faith lies in the trial court’s discretion, Defendant argues that the Superior Court correctly concluded that the trial court acted well within its discretion by sustaining Defendant’s preliminary objection and dismissing Plaintiff’s complaint due to her failure to put forth a good-faith effort to serve that complaint.<sup>6</sup> Id. at 30-31.

V. Analysis

*8 [8] Prior to Lamp, a plaintiff could comply with the service requirements of the Rules of Civil Procedure and simultaneously undermine the purpose of the statute of limitations by initiating an action via the filing a writ prior to the expiration of the statute of limitations and continually reissuing that writ after the statute had run, all the while without serving notice on the defendant that the plaintiff had commenced an action. The Lamp Court substantially narrowed this avenue for potential abuse by holding that “a writ of summons shall remain effective to commence an action only if the plaintiff then refrains from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery he has just set in motion.” Lamp, 366 A.2d at 889.

Stated more in the affirmative, Lamp requires plaintiffs to act diligently to meet their good-faith requirement to effectuate service of process upon defendants so as not to dilute the policies underlying the statute of limitations. Id. (“Our purpose is to avoid the situation in which a plaintiff can bring an action, but, by not making a good-faith effort to notify a defendant, retain exclusive control over it for a period in excess of that permitted by the statute of limitations.”).

In Farinacci, this Court aided the bench and bar by further defining the contours of the Lamp rule. As noted supra, the Farinacci Court clarified that: (1) plaintiffs carry an evidentiary burden of proving that they made a good-faith effort to ensure that notice of the commencement of actions was served on defendants, McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 672; and (2) “[i]n each case, where noncompliance with Lamp is alleged, the [trial] court must determine in its sound discretion whether a good-faith effort to effectuate notice was made[.]” Farinacci, 511 A.2d at 759. Importantly, our decision in Farinacci did nothing to lessen a plaintiff’s burden to act diligently in promptly serving notice of the commencement of an action on a defendant so as not to thwart the purpose of the statute of limitations. Indeed, the Farinacci Court ultimately concluded that the plaintiff therein failed to establish a good-faith effort to serve a writ where a four-week delay in service was attributable to counsel’s negligence in forgetting to take the necessary steps to effectuate service of the writ. Id. at 759-60.

In McCreesh, the Court sought to resolve a pattern of conflicting opinions from the intermediate courts. On the one hand, some of those decisions required plaintiffs to comply strictly with the rules regarding service to satisfy the Lamp-Farinacci good-faith requirement, while, on the other hand, different panels allowed “a more flexible approach, excusing plaintiffs’ initial procedurally defective service where the defendant has actual notice of the commencement of litigation and is not otherwise prejudiced[.]” McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 666. After explaining that “[n]either our cases nor our rules contemplate punishing a plaintiff for technical missteps where he has satisfied the purpose of the statute of limitations by supplying a defendant with actual notice[.]” the Court stated that it embraced the logic of cases which “would dismiss only those claims where plaintiffs have demonstrated an intent to stall the judicial machinery or where plaintiffs' failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure has prejudiced defendant."

McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 674.

[9] Although McCreesh made clear that a plaintiff could fulfill her good-faith service mandate without strictly complying with the service rules as long as her efforts resulted in actual notice of the lawsuit to the defendant, like Farinacci, McCreesh did nothing to modify a plaintiff's duty to act diligently to serve notice of the commencement of an action so as not to undermine the policies that drive the statute of limitations. Nor, for that matter, did McCreesh change the rule clarified in Farinacci that the plaintiff carries an evidentiary burden to prove that she made a good-faith effort to effectuate service of process in a timely manner. To the contrary, as observed throughout this opinion, the McCreesh Court alluded to this evidentiary requirement. See id. at 672 ("We subtly altered our holding in Lamp in Farinacci, requiring plaintiffs to demonstrate 'a good-faith effort to effectuate notice of commencement of the action.'").

*9 In sum, Lamp and its progeny require a plaintiff to make a good-faith effort in diligently and timely serving process on a defendant. When a defendant presents a factual dispute as to whether a plaintiff fulfilled this duty, the plaintiff carries an evidentiary burden to demonstrate that she met her good-faith mandate. If a plaintiff presents credible evidence that she made this attempt at service, then she fulfills her requirement to prove good faith. If a plaintiff does not present such evidence, then she has failed to satisfy her evidentiary burden, regardless of whether her actions (or inaction) were intentional, unintentional, or otherwise. However, pursuant to McCreesh, a trial court should not punish a plaintiff by dismissing her complaint where she is able to establish that her improper but diligent attempts at service resulted in the defendant receiving actual notice of the commencement of the action, unless the plaintiff's failure to serve process properly evinced an intent to stall the judicial machinery or otherwise prejudiced the defendant.

VI. Conclusion

[10] The incident that led to this negligence lawsuit occurred on July 25, 2016, and the two-year statute of limitations on the cause of action was set to expire on July 24, 2018. Plaintiff timely commenced the action by filing a complaint on April 26, 2018. As outlined in detail supra, the law required Plaintiff to act diligently in serving original process on Defendant so as not to undermine the policies that animate the statute of limitations. Concerning this requirement, the record reflects that, before the statute of limitations ran, Plaintiff filed only an affidavit of non-service in the trial court. The affidavit asserted that, on May 4, 2018, Plaintiff attempted to serve the complaint on Defendant at an address in Philadelphia but learned from the owners of the home that Defendant had sold the house a year-and-a-half earlier and moved to Virginia. As the lower courts accurately reported, the trial court record and docket reflect that Appellant did nothing else until she filed a praecipe to reinstate the complaint on August 22, 2018.

On September 10, 2018, i.e., nearly seven weeks after the statute of limitations would have expired on Plaintiff's claim but for the filing of the complaint, Defendant filed preliminary objections pursuant to, inter alia, Pa.R.C.P. 1028(a)(1), raising a factual question as to whether Plaintiff fulfilled her legal duty to make a good-faith effort to serve her complaint on Defendant. At that point, Plaintiff had an obligation to produce evidence to demonstrate that she met this duty; yet, she offered no such evidence.

Consequently, on October 3, 2018, the trial court entered an order sustaining Defendant's preliminary objection and dismissing Plaintiff's complaint with prejudice due to her failure to make good-faith efforts to serve the complaint on Defendant. Like the Superior Court, we find no abuse of discretion in this decision. Stated succinctly, Plaintiff failed to prove that she acted diligently in attempting to make her good-faith effort to serve Defendant with notice that she filed her complaint against him. Moreover, although Defendant's counsel entered an appearance on August 13, 2018, i.e., after the statute of limitations expired, there is no evidence of record that would otherwise establish that Plaintiff's actions or inaction gave Defendant actual notice of the lawsuit in a timely manner.<sup>7</sup> Accordingly, the holding in McCreesh is of no assistance to Plaintiff.

*10 In closing, we observe that any averments made by Plaintiff in her motion for reconsideration have no impact on our conclusion in this matter. The trial court exercised its sound discretion in denying that motion, supra at — n.2, and we will not disturb that determination on appeal.

For these reasons, we affirm the Superior Court's judgment, which affirmed the trial court's order sustaining Defendant's preliminary objection and dismissing Plaintiff's complaint with prejudice.

JUSTICE WECHT, dissenting

I respectfully dissent. The Majority affirms the dismissal of Rhasheena Gussom's negligence complaint against Maurice Teagle stemming from a July 25, 2016 motor vehicle accident.

In doing so, the Court endeavors to clarify the rule of Lamp and McCreesh,<sup>1</sup> which permits a plaintiff to toll the statute of limitations in a civil action where she is unable to effectuate service of original process within the time period provided by the Pennsylvania Rules of Civil Procedure. The Majority holds that “a trial court has the discretion to dismiss a complaint when a plaintiff fails to offer proof that she diligently attempted to serve process on a defendant in a timely manner and there is no evidence to indicate that the defendant had actual notice of the action in the relevant time frame, regardless of whether the plaintiff acted or failed to act intentionally.” Maj. Op. at ——. I read Lamp and its progeny as requiring affirmative proof of either plaintiff's intent to stall the judicial machinery or actual prejudice to the defendant before a civil action may be dismissed in these circumstances. Both of these proofs are lacking here. Even under the Majority's formulation, however, I would find Teagle's appellate counsel's admission that trial counsel received notice of the complaint through the defendant's insurance carrier, prompting his entry of appearance in this matter within three weeks of the July 25, 2018 statute of limitations, to be sufficient to satisfy McCreesh's demand of proof of “actual service.”

As the Majority aptly observes, prior to 1976, Pennsylvania courts witnessed repeated abuses of the Rules of Civil Procedure. Plaintiffs routinely would attempt to toll the statute of limitations by filing a writ of summons, having the writ repeatedly reissued as a matter of course, and then deliberately failing to notify defendants of pending litigation.

Maj. Op. at — (citing McCreesh, 888 A.2d at 665). In announcing the Lamp rule, we declared that its “purpose” was to “avoid the situation in which a plaintiff can bring an action, but, by not making a good-faith effort to notify a defendant, retain exclusive control over it for a period in excess of that permitted by the statute of limitations.” Lamp, 366 A.2d at 889. Accordingly, pursuant to our supervisory power over Pennsylvania courts, we declared that an action commencing suit “shall remain effective to commence an action only if the plaintiff then refrains from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery he has just set in motion.” Id.

A decade later, in Farinacci v. Beaver County Industrial Development Authority, 510 Pa. 589, 511 A.2d 757 (1986), we indicated that “Lamp requires of plaintiffs a good-faith effort to effectuate notice of commencement of the action,” which was to be determined by a court “in its sound discretion.” Id. at 759. At issue in Farinacci was a praecipe for a writ of summons filed on the last permissible day under a two-year statute of limitations for personal injury actions. When the prothonotary issued the writ the next day, plaintiffs’ “counsel intended to immediately instruct and pay the sheriff for service,” but “he misplaced the file.” Id. at 758. Although counsel ultimately discovered the file just over a week later, he then “forgot to take necessary steps to effectuate service of the writ,” which had to be reissued more than five weeks after it initially was issued. We suggested in dicta that the “eight or nine days of the delay [that] was attributable to counsel's simply misplacing the file” was “not necessarily inconsistent with a finding of good faith.” Id. at 760. However, we affirmed the trial court's dismissal of plaintiffs’ action because they “failed to provide an explanation for” the remaining four weeks of delay—which plaintiffs attributed “only to counsel's faulty memory”—thereby depriving the trial court of evidence by which to “substantiate a finding that plaintiffs made a good-faith effort to effectuate service.” Id.

*11 Subsequently, in Witherspoon v. City of Philadelphia, 564 Pa. 388, 768 A.2d 1079 (2001) (plurality), a plurality of the Court cited Farinacci for the proposition that there is “no distinction between an intentional withholding of service and a lack of service due to counsel's inadvertence” when determining whether the “condition subsequent” of “service, or at least a good faith attempt at service,” had been fulfilled. Id. at 1083; see id. (“Lamp and Farinacci establish that any failure regarding follow-up activity that is attributable to the plaintiff or his agents, rather than public officials, falls outside th[e] purpose” of the rule.). Witherspoon concerned a nine-month delay in service attributable to the process server, who declined to make additional attempts at service after the first attempt was unsuccessful and also failed to make and file a return of no service as required by Pa.R.C.P. 405(a) and (e). Additionally, plaintiff’s counsel failed “to promptly ascertain the results of the process server’s efforts.” Id. at 1083. The plurality concluded that “any failure regarding follow-up [service] activity that is attributable to the plaintiff or his agents, rather than public officials, falls outside” the purpose of the rule announced in Lamp, as refined by Farinacci. Id. Because Witherspoon’s counsel opted to use a private firm to make service rather than the sheriff, Witherspoon was “bound by the actions of [his] agents (counsel and the process server),” and their failure to effectuate service for the better part of a year was fatal to the civil action. Id.<sup>2</sup>

Returning to the issue most recently in McCreech, we cautioned against “punishing a plaintiff for technical missteps where he has satisfied the purpose of the statute of limitations by supplying a defendant with actual notice.” 888 A.2d at 674. McCreech thus “embrace[d] the logic” of the Superior Court’s decision in Leidich v. Franklin, 394 Pa.Super. 302, 575 A.2d 914 (1990), “which, applying Lamp, would dismiss only those claims where plaintiffs have demonstrated an intent to stall the judicial machinery or where plaintiff’s failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure has prejudiced defendant.” McCreech, 888 A.2d at 674; see Leidich, 575 A.2d at 918 (gleaning from Lamp and its progeny that: “(1) one’s ‘good faith’ effort to notify a defendant of the institution of a lawsuit is to be assessed on a case-by-case basis; and (2) the thrust of all inquiry is one of whether a plaintiff engaged in a ‘course of conduct’ forestalling the legal machinery put in motion by his/her filings”). In a footnote, we indicated “that there may be situations where actual notice may not be absolutely necessary so long as prejudice did not result,” but declined to “delineate such an exception” because the issue was not before us. McCreech, 888 A.2d at 674 n.20.

McCreech was a significant departure from Farinacci and Witherspoon. Whereas Farinacci suggested that plaintiffs carry an evidentiary burden to establish their good-faith efforts to ensure that notice was served on defendants—which McCreech made clear can be satisfied through proof of actual notice, however informal or technically deficient—unlike the Majority, I read McCreech as unmistakably shifting the burden to defendants to affirmatively demonstrate either plaintiffs’ intent to stall the judicial process or prejudice resulting from their failure to comply with the Rules of Civil Procedure in order to secure dismissal of a civil action. As such, plaintiffs’ inadvertent mistakes are no longer sufficient to warrant dismissal. Rather, McCreech counsels a reversion to the threshold inquiry first posited in Lamp: namely, has the plaintiff “refrain[ed] from a course of conduct which serves to stall in its tracks the legal machinery he has just set in motion”? Lamp, 366 A.2d at 889.

Properly analyzed under this standard, Farinacci may have been wrongly decided given the absence of any intent to stall over the five weeks between filing the praecipe for the writ of summons and its eventual service upon the defendant. The same is true here, where there is no evidence that Gussom intended to delay service of process, nor any indication of prejudice to Teagle. To the contrary, the record shows that Gussom made at least four attempts at service (three times in Philadelphia and once in Waynesboro, Virginia) in her seemingly futile, interstate effort to track down Teagle, which began nearly three months before the statute of limitations expired on July 24, 2018. This stands in stark contrast to the plaintiffs in Farinacci and Witherspoon, who waited until the last possible day to initiate their action and made just one attempt at service in nine months, respectively.

*12 But even under the Majority’s formulation, Gussom likely satisfied her burden in this case, notwithstanding her inexplicable failure to respond to Teagle’s preliminary objections, which should not be condoned. Specifically, at argument, when asked if Teagle’s trial counsel had entered his appearance in the case on August 13, 2018, upon receiving notice of Gussom’s complaint from Teagle’s insurance carrier, Teagle’s appellate counsel initially deflected. However, he then acknowledged that trial counsel had in fact entered his appearance because Gussom's counsel advised Teagle's insurance company of the litigation.<sup>3</sup> This admission is supported by evidence of record, namely, Teagle's September 9, 2018 preliminary objections, which included Gussom's complaint as an attached exhibit. The trial court's docket thus provided a basis for the court to inquire as to Teagle's actual notice of the complaint within weeks of the statute of limitation's expiration, if not sooner depending on when the insurance carrier notified defense counsel.

It would strain credulity to suggest that Teagle's counsel entered his appearance and filed these objections without first consulting his client regarding his receipt of Gussom's complaint, regardless of its source. While sending a complaint to an insurance carrier generally is insufficient to effectuate service under our Rules of Civil Procedure, see  Cahill

v. Schults, 434 Pa.Super. 332, 643 A.2d 121, 125 (1994);  Schrivver v. Mazziotti, 432 Pa.Super. 276, 638 A.2d 224, 227 (1994), Ferrara v. Hoover, 431 Pa.Super. 407, 636 A.2d 1151, 1153 (1994), I see no good reason why it should not suffice to establish a plaintiff's good-faith effort to serve a defendant if it results in actual notice to the defendant of the pending litigation. Accordingly, because actual service appears to have been made here, and there exists no evidence of intent to stall or prejudice to Teagle, I would reverse the order of the Superior Court and reinstate Gussom's complaint.
